MARKETING OF FARM TIMBER.

Forest Service Says Ignorance of Woodlot Owners Often Costs Them Dear.

Washington, Aug. 27.—The marketing of farm timber presents some of the same difficulties, but in an aggravated form, than the farmer meets in selling other crops, says a Forest Service contribution to the Year Book of the Department of Agriculture, just issued. The farmer, the first to know of his timber, is often ignorant of its value for him. Timber, most farmers now sell their saw timber on the stump to a mill man, such sales ordinarily being made for a lump sum. The mill man, experienced in estimating, goes through the woods and sizes up the quantity and value of the timber he wants. The owner, being a farmer and not a lumberman, seldom knows anything about estimating timber and has only the vaguest idea of what it ought to bring. The consequence of this condition is that the farmer often receives only a small fraction of the actual market value of his stumpage.

Amazing examples of what a farmer may thus throw away are often encountered by foresters, continues the article. For instance, a Massachusetts farmer sold a million feet of timber to a portable sawmill man for $1,200, and thought he had obtained a good price. His neighbor, however, who knew something about timber, got $7,000 for the same quantity of white pine from the very same portable mill man.

The second error was in not learning before he attempted to sell his timber how much he had and what it ought to bring him in money.

The productive capacity of the 200 million acres of farm lands throughout the country which either have, or should have, timber growing on them is enormous, says the article. This area is larger than all the national forests put together, and with an annual growth of 200 board feet per acre of saw timber—a moderate allowance under the practice of forestry—it would produce a million feet of lumber, or the equivalent of the entire lumber cut of the country, in addition to not less than 150 million cords of firewood.

These figures, continues the article, probably never will be realized, for the

CALIFORNIA A LABORATORY FOR POLITICAL EXPERIMENTS

Former President Taft Warns Commonwealth That It Will Have to Pay.

Berkeley, Cal., Aug. 27.—Former President Taft warned California today that it was conducting a "political laboratory" for social and political experiments for which it would have to pay.

Other states, he declared, would benefit at California's expense. Mr. Taft spoke in the open air Greek theater at the University of California. His speech was one of several on the program which he described as general vaudeville.

"You of the west are more receptive to new ideas than we," he said. "This state is a laboratory for political experiments, which we in the east are quite willing you should maintain. If you are quite willing to pay the bills, and you may be sure you will have to pay them."

reason that the present area of farm woodlands is much greater than it will be eventually. For example, woodland comprises 31 per cent of the entire farm area of the South, and undoubtedly much of this land will be put to other uses than timber growing. Nevertheless, the farmers of the United States now own at least 250 million acres of woodland, and 1.3 billion cords of cordwood, and this timber should produce a substantial part of their incomes. Farmers ought to make the most of their timber, and the public should be interested in this question for the reason that the vast aggregate of farm timber should be available to supplement the other sources of the general supply.

Effort to Find Big Car Which Killed John M. Cohen—
Another Continuation in Oil Barrel Case—Thief Who Stole Oil Truck Captured—Sweet Tooth Gets Six Boys Into Trouble.

John M. Cohen was killed and Rose McLaughlin's skull was fractured in an automobile mishap just after midnight Thursday, while returning to their home in Providence from Rocky Point, the others in the car being A. Silverman and a woman whose name is not known to the police authorities. Mr. Cohen was driving along Elmwood avenue at a fair rate of speed, when a big automobile struck him from the distance coming towards the Cohen car, which was well to the right side of the road. Without swinging to either side the big car struck the Cohen car a terrific blow, causing it to capsize, and the offending car proceeded at a high rate of speed and without any attempt to ascertain the damage done. The four in the Cohen car were thrown out and Silverman was pinned under the overturned car, but escaped serious injury. Soon after the mishap another automobile came along and carried Miss McLaughlin to the Rhode Island hospital, and the other woman to her home, after Mr. Silverman was extricated from beneath the car.

The Providence police department immediately commenced efforts to locate the car that caused the fatality, with the hope of taking the driver into custody. Leo Cohen, brother of the slain man, was ordered to locate the offending machine, under the belief that detectives could be effected by locating it in some garage as it must have been damaged in the collision. Mr. Cohen and his two associates arrived in Westerly early Friday morning and summoned the assistance of Police Chief Brown. All the local garages, those at Watch Hill and Pawcatuck were visited but no trace of the sought-for car resulted. Mr. Cohen and party then started for New London and were to visit all garages between Westerly and the city.

The party that came to Westerly were on the wrong trail, and the statements made are contradicted by Leonard J. Barber, a prominent who gave himself up to the Providence police, Friday afternoon. He was arraigned at a special session of the Eighth District court, on charges of manslaughter, and of failing to return to the scene of the accident. He pleaded not guilty to both charges and was held for trial on September 22, in a bond of $500 on the manslaughter charge and $200 on the other.

Mr. Barber upon surrendering to the police said that it was his machine which he was driving when it collided with the Cohen car. He said he was alone and on the way to his farm on the Rocky Point road. He declares he did not run away after the collision, and was well on the right hand side of the road when the collision occurred. He said he stopped his car, and being in the railroad track and not the car off the track before, returning to the scene of the accident. Mr. Barber says he spoke to Mr. Silverman and the woman who was in the car, and he could be of no assistance he then went to his home.

The cases of Deputy Sheriff George M. Barber against William Mauren and Robert Mauren, charged with the theft of eighteen empty oil barrels from the Bradford Dyeing association, announced that he had been advised that Deputy Sheriff Barber, the complaining witness was in the care of a physician and was unable to be present. Town Solicitor Agard stated that the state was ready to proceed without the testimony of the complaining witness. Attorney Ledwidge counsel for the accused, asked for a continuance as two important witnesses could not be subpoenaed as they were out of town, and further that the complaining witness was an important witness for the defense. Mr. Ledwidge stated that when arrested, Anderton asked the sheriff to return with him to Bradford and would point out the man who sold the barrels, which he loaded on his motor truck in broad day light and was proceeding to Pawcatuck when arrested. Mr. Ledwidge said he could show that Mauren took no part in the transaction. Mr. Ledwidge stated that the injury and wrong would be done his clients if he were forced to proceed.

After a hearing by the commissioner of inland fisheries, in public session the lobster licenses were revoked of Horace Tucker, George L. Hargraves and George R. Ellis of Wakefield, Ellis Wilbour of Little Compton and Nicholas Card of Newport for violation of laws relative to the taking of lobsters. The commission decided to install an exhibit at the Kingston fair next month, and Superintendent Barnes of the Wickford hatchery will be in charge of the state's display.

John R. Wilcox of Kingston, sheriff for Washington county, arrived in Westerly, Friday noon, in Harman Oil's powerful automobile having in custody the chap who stole Mr. Oil's speed launch Reliance from its moorings in Newport harbor before daybreak Thursday, the boat having been recovered and the thief captured at Beach park, near Clinton, Conn. The Reliance is rated at 35 horsepower and has speed of thirty-seven and one-half miles an hour.

Sheriff Wilcox said the first to report having seen the boat came from the Watch Hill coast guard station, and that the man in charge took on fuel and that there was evident engine trouble. Later word was received from Noank that a boat of the description had been seen in the offing, but then it was not known there that the boat had been stolen. The Reliance was a speed launch, built at Beach park, and the operator of the boat began to make repairs. His actions aroused the suspicions of a woman and she told a man who was in the boat had been stolen. She took a chance and acted. With the aid of her son she strapped the motor to a plank and sent it to Clinton for Sheriff Edgar Watrous. The officer already had received a description of the stolen boat and he placed the man who refused to give his own or an assumed name, under arrest. When Sheriff Wilcox arrived, the fellow waived his extradition rights, and consented to take the automobile ride back to Newport.

Six boys of tender age, abstracted about three dollars' worth of candy from a box at the White Rock station, were rounded up by Chief Brown and ordered to report to Joseph T. Murphy, state probation officer. The other two boys were known but could not be located. Chief Brown summoned Detective Mangerville, aged 11, to aid him in the search for the boys. Within an hour the young detective reported in his style:

"Say, Tom Brown, I got the kids and they're up to Joe Murphy's now. I told them I'd tie them with a rope and haul them in if they held back, so they came along all right, all right." The detective was paid a few dollars to pay his way into a movie show. The little chaps who took the candy were given fatherly advice by the probation officer and chief, and were permitted to go home on promise that they would be better boys, upon their parents' promise to take care of the boys. One of the lads on the outside made the pertinent query: How'd you like to be the detective?

U.S. MARINE CORPS PHOTOGRAPHY

Washington, D. C., Aug. 27.—The quaint, delightful coast country of Cornwall, a favored haunt of peace and quietness, yet where some of the most important English naval stations are now feverish with plans and preparation, is described for the National Geographic society by Florence Craig Albright. At points along this coast, England holds concentrated great battle fleets. Here, west of Lands End, are the Scilly Islands, and beyond Cornwall, further up the channel, lies Plymouth, military harbor and great naval base. The charm of this old-fashioned, picturesque land of fisher folk and peasants is told by Mrs. Albright, who explored its coast before war clouds recalled a martial stir to Cornwall, for the society in the following bulletin:

"Here are rock and headland and cliff, now green, now golden with gorse, now bare, and rugged, inset bay and harbor, with here and there an isolated house, a tiny village, a pretentious town, a great port, a friendly coast. Yes, with heavy seas and winds, with thick sea-fogs—a dangerous one; rocks ever ready to tear holes in the stoutest vessel, currents ever ready to drive them on. But a picturesque coast; a wonderfully beautiful coast, both upon summer days and in winter storms; a coast with many harbors, none too easy of entrance by reason of rocks and tides, and many impossible for any but the smallest craft."

There are splendid memories remaining to all of the coast's history, says the writer, for too many years have sailed up and down the channel since the days of the great sea battles, these places with the task of making history. Fishing fleets have kept the foreground of the picture through latter years, and the coast has been a scene of war preparation have never been absent from Cornwall's waters. One of them was observed and photographed recently while eliciting from a cornet sounds that were more or less musical.

Funeral of Mrs. Henry Collins.

The funeral of Mrs. Henry Collins, who died at Backus hospital early this week was held from the Congregational church Friday afternoon.

Burial was in the Plainfield cemetery. Mrs. Collins was one of the oldest of Plainfield residents. She was 95, and had lived in this town practically all her life. Her husband was a soldier in the Civil war.

Looking for Deputy.

Game Warden Day of Daryville was in town recently, looking for a deputy to fill the local position. With the hunting season close at hand and law on deer off, it is important that some one be appointed to look after the state's interest locally.

loving little sea city, where the most picturesque of plate types originated; of Newlyn, the home of the true old sort of fishermen and the mecca of artists; of Margate, the old, which, according to Cornish history, was an important city visited by Phoenician merchants in the days of Ezekiel the prophet; of Fowey, once one of the greatest seaports of the land, which sent scores of boats to the plundering of Normandy, a one-name warlike city whose glory has long since faded.

Fowey, Mr. Albright explains, is a most unpleasant-looking place. Cornish, seems them highly and makes them into pie with much cream and parsley."

Cornwall, Mrs. Albright explains, makes any number of things into pie and calls the product invariably "squab pie," though all things but squabs are among the materials.

"Squab pie" have risen to the following Cornish story repeated by the writer:

"The devil came one day to the banks of the Tamar, the rippling river that divides Devon and Cornwall, and looked over at the rocky land beyond. His majesty considered the swift current and shook his head. 'No,' he said finally. 'No, that's no place for me! Everyone who goes there is turned into a saint and everything else into squab pie. I'm fit for neither one nor the other! And he stayed in Devon.'

Just beyond the Cornwall boundary is Plymouth, of Mayflower memory, city, which, according to Mrs. Albright, has never allowed her growing commerce to interfere with her position as a fortress of the first class and naval arsenal. Portsmouth, considerably further east upon this coast, is also a strong fortress, and an important garrison town, and its great dominion, too, the writer adds, was likely overpowered in the work of "keeping the sea that is the wall of England."
